

The Little Girl
That Meets Me

James R. Murray
(1841-1905)

James Ramsey Murray (1841-1905) was born to Scottish immigrants in Ballard Vale, Andover, Massachusetts. He was educated in the public schools and started a business career with the Tyer Rubber Company. His life changed directions when, at the encouragement of his friends, he studied at the Musical Institute in North Reading, Massachusetts. There he studied with some of the best teachers of the day including Lowell Mason, George F. Root, William B. Bradbury, and George J. Webb. He enlisted as an Army musician during the Civil War and his first song, "Daisy Deane," was composed in a Virginia camp in 1863. After the war, he returned home and taught piano, but soon moved to Chicago, Illinois, to join the Root & Cady publishing house as editor of "The Song Messenger." He remained there until the great Chicago fire of 1871, when he returned to Andover and taught music privately and in the public schools. In 1881, he moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, to work for the John Church Company as editor of "The Musical Visitor" and taking charge of the publishing department. He died in Cincinnati. He wrote many songs and gospel songs, compiled and edited many volumes of music for church or school use, and edited five volumes of Wagner's musical dramas.

Root & Cady
(1869)

There's a little girl that meets me,
And with laughter ever greets me,
And to kiss her, oft entreats me
As I stray,
'Long the path of life so dreary,
Where the saddened heart and weary,
Shades the sunlight shining near me,
On my way.

May the world smile kindly on her,
Benedictions fall upon her,
Angels be her guard of honor
As she goes,
Through this world of ours singing,
Peace to troubled spirits bringing,
And no grief her pure heart wringing
With its woes.

May the sweetest harp in heaven,
Brightest crown that e'er was given,
Where the waves of life are driven
Past the throne,
Echo to her dainty fingers,
On her pure brow ever linger,
While each angel be a singer
Calling home.
