R. S. Taylor
(1838-1918)

Robert Stewart Taylor (1838-1918) was born near Frankfort, Ohio, the son of Presbyterian minister and missionary Isaac Newton Taylor. Isaac was an educator and founded of Liber College near Portland, Indiana. Robert was educated privately by his father and at Liber College. He studied law and moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana, as a law clerk. He was admitted to the bar and became a lawyer. In his successful career, he was appointed the first prosecuting attorney of Allen County, appointed a judge of the court of common pleas, and was elected to the Indiana legislature. He declined nomination to run for Congress, but succeeded Benjamin Harrison on the Mississippi Commission; also serving on the Monetary Commission. He ran for U. S. Senate and was a charter member of the American Bar Association. He was known as one of the most expert patent attorneys in the nation. His most significant case established the right of all companies to manufacture electric lamps. He took great interest in literature and music. He studied music at a musical convention at Geneseo, New York, and his song "O, Wrap the Flag Around Me, Boys" was played by a band at Lincoln's funeral. He claimed to have written more songs than any other man in the country other than Stephen Foster. He died in Fort Wayne.

'Tis a calm and beauteous night, love,
As my soldier's couch I spread
Where the stars are smiling down, love,
Thro' the trees above my head.
But my thoughts are far away, love,
Far away with home and thee;
And I know within my heart love,
Thou art thinking now of me.

*Yes, my thoughts are far away, love,
Far away from home and thee;
And I know within my heart, love,
Thou art thinking now of me.*

In the deep blue vault of Heav'n, love,
Seated on its golden throne,
Well I know the glowing star, love,
That we marked and called our own,
And through all the lonely night, love,
Ever turn my thoughts to love;
As it whispers to my heart, love,
Thou art thinking still of me.

Ere the dawn of coming day, love,
I may hear war's rude alarms,
And the star of joy and hope, love,
Set amid the clash of arms!
But in camp or bloody field, love,
Whatsoe'er my fate may be,
Still I know, within my heart, love,
Thou wilt ever think of me.
